Comments.

(1) The AA gun emplacement at the eastern Elbe River bank, south of the Magdeburg-Berlin railroad line, was reported at the end of March 1951. However, only five emplaced 37-mm AA guns at that time. See

The Flak Kaserne on Zibkeleberweg quarters elements of the 3d Gds AAA Div of the Third Shock Army. The loading of a train on 27 April 1951 may have been in conjunction with the movement of units of this division to Letzling Heath, as units had started to arrive at Letzling Heath in mid-April 1951. The movement included a convoy with AA guns of the 3d Gds AAA Div, which arrived at Letzling Heath on 19 April.

25X1A

(3) It is possible that the 63d Gds Mecz Regt of the 19th Gds Mecz Div, which is believed to be located in the barracks installation on the north and south side of Breitscheidstrasse, left about 20 April 1951, probably for Letzling Heath. The artillery components (?) of the LXXIX Mtz Rifle Corps or the Third Shock Army, which are also carried in the installation probably moved to fitengrabow.

(4) According to

(4) According to and the heavy mortars observed, the convoy may have been an element of the 573d (?) Mort Regt of the 19th Gds Mecz Div.

The signal unit of the LXXIX Mtz Rifle Corps or the Third Shock Army, which is carried in the Pionier Kaserne, probably moved to a troop training grounds.

(6) The information indicates that the headquarters units of the Third Shock Army, believed to be located in the Hindenburg Kaserne, were still there.
